SYNOPSIS

Petroleum Engineering is not a well-known engineering discipline. It is a niche area where its major contribution is to the Oil & Gas (O&G) Upstream Industry. This talk will introduce the study of Petroleum Engineering and how it contributes to the industry. The talk will go into the heart of Petroleum Engineering, the Life of Field. It is about the process cycle of a field that can take more than 40 years to complete. Each one of these 8 parts is the key to understanding how the industry works. Well proposal, exploration well, development project planning, development well, production, workover and well services, enhanced oil recovery and field plug & abandonment. Understanding the Life of Field shall open up the endless possibilities of technical and commercial contribution opportunities to the O&G Industry by all engineers. This is the time for all engineers to be exposed to the O&G business operations before the next boom!
