SYNOPSIS

In the oil and gas industry, there are various type of structures involve to bring the crude oil from the offshore well to the onshore processing facilities. This talk will give a brief introduction on these structures. In particular, it will discuss the following points:

- Upstream, midstream and downstream structures, and how these structures have evolved from decades ago.
- The differences between onshore and offshore oil and gas facilities.
- The detailed components of offshore structures – topsides and jacket.
- The fabrication and installation processes of offshore structures.

Attending this talk will give engineers a good awareness to the oil & gas structures - A good exposure for them before the industry's next boom!
