Introduction:

“[In 1842], the tort was in an embryonic state, with commerce and industry at very basic levels. But the common law is not static. It does not rest upon a Procrustean bed. It is organic. And flexible. It grows to meet changing conditions with dynamism. So, as the nature of trade and commerce developed, so did the tort. As persons found new ways committing "theft" of intellectual property, the common law rose to the challenge.” Per Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as his Lordship then was) in McCurry Restaurant (KL) Sdn Bhd v. McDonald’s Corporation [2009] 3 CLJ 540

As the trade and commerce developed, intellectual property rights and protection become one of the most valued assets. As competition becomes intense, IP rights owner must rise to the challenge.

This half-day course is designed to expose the participants to IP law and/or to create a continuous IP awareness and provide an overview on IP law (selected areas). It provides a springboard to educate participants in way to protect their branding, trade marks, patents, copyright and confidential information. It gives the participants a platform to understand and discuss critical issues (whether their own IP rights or others) faced by them in their day to day dealings.

At the end of the session, the participants should:

- Understand the basic concept of trade mark copyright, patents, confidential information;
- Aware of ways to protect their IP rights (selected IP rights);
- Be exposed to some tips on how to avoid any infringement or potential infringement of IP rights of others;
- Understand how to enforce their IP rights when there is infringement
