WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

OBJECTIVE

This webinar presents a valuable opportunity for practising engineers to deepen their understanding of Malaysia's talent-first approach and the role of SOCSO's schemes and Return to Work (RTW) programs in supporting workforce resilience and inclusivity.

Through this session, engineers will gain key insights into how strategic disability management and national protection frameworks can enhance workplace sustainability—especially before considering the hiring of expatriates. It is also a platform for engineers to align with national development goals, contribute to effective workforce planning, and explore collaborative roles in building a future-ready engineering ecosystem.

Take this chance to stay ahead in policy knowledge, talent retention strategies, and inclusive workforce engagement.

This impactful webinar is designed not only for practising engineers but also for employers, human resource professionals, workers' union representatives, disability inclusion advocates, and policy influencers who are passionate about strengthening Malaysia's workforce through sustainable and inclusive practices.

Participants will gain valuable insights into:

- The strategic importance of hiring local talent before considering expatriate recruitment
- SOCSO's protection schemes and Return to Work (RTW) Program, which play a critical role in supporting injured or disabled workers' reintegration
- How disability management and inclusive workplace practices can enhance organisational productivity and national development
- Opportunities for collaboration between industry and government to future-proof Malaysia's workforce

Whether you're involved in recruitment, workforce development, occupational health, or policy implementation, this webinar offers a timely opportunity to align your efforts with national priorities—ensuring that local talents are empowered and fully supported.
