SYNOPSIS

In meeting various challenges faced by the Government and to achieve value for money, the Government has adopted various procurement approaches/methods namely Build contract, Design and Build contract, Public Private Partnership (PPP) which can broadly divided into Build Operate Transfer and Private Finance Initiative and Alliancing Contract (which the Government is currently exploring).

The key differences with respect to the above are mainly responsibilities – technical and financial, risks allocation, performance expectation/measurement, role of the parties and consequences of termination.

For the Build and Design & Build procurement, the standard form of contract were well established. However, for PPP (with respect to the construction), a standard form of contract/guideline is yet to be developed. Often there are confusion in terms of the role and responsibilities of the Government Representative for the PPP projects during construction and maintenance.

Based on the above scenario, the KSU of Ministry of Works would like to have a Kopitiam session with IEM to explore and exchange ideas on the subject with the objective to establish a standard guideline in the near future, in supervising/monitoring PPP projects to ensure:

1. Understanding/appreciation of some of the salient terms/differences for each of the above procurement methods;
2. Quality and best practices are not being compromised, while ensuring the element of creativity and innovation for the project;
3. Value for money being achieved by the Government over the life cycle of the project;
4. Optimum risks allocation to the parties that can best manage the risks;
5. Timely project completion.
