SYNOPSIS

Striving for excellence is an important part of the engineering professionalism. Engineers who strive for excellence pay attention to detail and putting quality into everything they do. This attitude separates the high achievers, who make rapid strides in their career from the rest. Striving for excellence does not mean that one must be perfect. It means that one has to use one's talents, abilities, and skills in the best way possible and get ahead of others by giving that little extra.

Personality is well researched and found to be a significant predictor of work excellence. Engineers who know their personalities and their corresponding behaviours would definitely have an edge in their career endeavour. Together with the knowledge of the Contingency Leadership Theory, participants will be able to reflect how to combine this leadership with their personalities to lead their team to their maximum advantage in their strive for excellence.
